LINEUP

The special «Finance 2030 – the future of the Swiss financial industry» revolves thematically around the (inevitable) digital transformation of the Swiss financial center. The publication identifies fields of action that traditional financial institutions will have to deal with in this decade in order to meet the expectations of clientele and the challenges of the market. Since the turnaround in interest rates, banks are once again earning more money from their traditional business. How does this affect the pressure to innovate? Newly emerged ecosystems now have to prove their capabilities. The traditional financial world is still struggling with legacy systems, its somewhat dusty image, and its digital know-how, which in many cases still needs to be developed. The digitization of the financial industry will continue for decades to come and will not suddenly stop. Now is the time to set the course and invest substantially in digital innovation.

The special «Finance 2030 – the future of the Swiss financial industry» is published as a piggyback to the «Netzwoche», describes and analyses the opportunities and challenges posed by the digital transformation of the traditional financial world and offers innovative companies from the financial and technology environment a journalistic platform.
